NY AG SAYS WILL SUE OVER OBAMACARE REPEAL

1 New York state Attorney General Eric Schneiderman intends to sue the federal government if Republican lawmakers pass proposed legislation to overhaul the U.S. healthcare system, his office said on Monday. Schneiderman's office said it has identified "multiple constitutional defects" with the Republican healthcare bills. The U.S. Senate is considering legislation to repeal parts of the Affordable Care Act, Democratic former President Barack Obama's signature legislative achievement, commonly known as Obamacare.

AUSTRALIAN FATALLY SHOT BY MN POLICE

2 Minnesota officials were investigating how an Australian woman who called police for help over the weekend ended up shot and killed by one of the officers who responded in an alley near her house. Minneapolis Mayor Betsy Hodges called for a probe of why officers were not using the body cameras they are equipped with during the incident that led to the death of Justine Damond, from Sydney, around midnight Saturday. The state Bureau of Criminal Apprehension was investigating the shooting, in keeping with a new policy adopted in 2014, to avoid having the Minneapolis police department investigate itself, said Hodges, who described herself as "heartsick and deeply disturbed" by the shooting. "We don't want to jeopardize the BCA investigation, or compromise its independence," the mayor said.

END TO MIDDLE EASTERN AIRLINES LAPTOP BAN

3 The U.S. Transportation Security Administration said on Monday it had lifted a ban on passengers on Saudi Arabian Airlines carrying large electronics like laptops onboard U.S.-bound flights, the last carrier under the restrictions. In March, U.S. officials imposed restrictions on passengers carrying laptops and other large electronic gear in cabins on nine airlines, most of which were Middle Eastern carriers, to address the potential threat of hidden explosives. Last month, U.S. officials announced new security requirements for all airlines rather than an expansion of the laptop ban and have been dropping the restrictions from airlines as they boosted security.

TECH FIRMS URGE US TO RETAIN NET NEUTRALITY

5 A group representing major technology firms including Alphabet Inc. and Facebook Inc. urged the U.S. Federal Communications Commission on Monday to abandon plans to reverse the landmark 2015 rules barring internet service providers from blocking or slowing consumer access to web content. The Internet Association said in its filing with the FCC that dismantling the net neutrality rules "will create significant uncertainty in the market and upset the careful balance that has led to the current virtuous circle of innovation in the broadband ecosystem." The rollback will harm consumers, said the group, which also represents Amazon .com Inc., Microsoft Inc., Netflix Inc., Twitter Inc. and Snap Inc. In May, the FCC voted 2-1 to advance Republican FCC Chairman Ajit Pai's plan to reverse the former Obama administration's order reclassifying internet service providers as if they were utilities.

President Trump's support is slipping amid scandals and tweets

New polling reveals the lowest approval rating of all time.

ERIN TIERNAN
@ErinTiernan
erin.tiernan@metro.us

New poll numbers show approval of President Donald Trump might be slipping.

Though the 45th president has seen some of the lowest poll numbers of any modern president since he entered the Oval Office in January, Trump's approval ratings have now hit an all-time low. Just 36 percent of Americans now say they approve of Trump's performance – the lowest approval rating at the six-month mark of any president since modern polling began about 70 years ago, according to a new Washington Post/ABC News poll.

Trump's approval rating has continued to erode over the past six months, and as his administration has failed to deliver on key campaign promises like his border wall, Muslim ban and healthcare repeal, so also goes his Republican base.

Seventy percent of people surveyed in the Washington Post/ABC poll see Trump's behavior as president as "unpresidential." Just 24 percent described his behavior as "proper and fitting."

Among Republicans, 38 percent say Trump has acted unpresidential since entering the office, and ABC's polling analyst Gary Langer said dissatisfaction is growing among groups who strongly supported Trump in the 2016 election. Forty-eight percent of evangelical white Protestants and 55 percent of non-college-educated white men agreed that Trump's behavior falls short of expectations.

Trump's actions both in person and on Twitter have long been a source of controversy, helping drive his approval ratings into the ground. Trump has claimed the media wants him to stop tweeting because they know it allows him to communicate directly with his base, but the fact is the president's off-the-cuff and inflammatory Twitter style is driving major web traffic for many news organizations, and it's his fellow Republican politicians that want him to stop.

PRESIDENT TRUMP'S APPROVAL RATING

Trump has a message for them regardless of their political affiliation or agenda: "My use of social media is not Presidential — it's MODERN DAY PRESIDENTIAL. Make America Great Again!" he tweeted on July 1.

But he might be the only one with that opinion — the Post/ABC poll surveyed Americans on the heels of yet another shocking revelation in the investigation into whether the Trump campaign colluded with Russia to influence the 2016 election.

Last week, the president's eldest son, Donald Trump Jr., admitted to meeting with a Russian lawyer whom he thought had evidence on then-Democratic nominee Hillary Clinton. Under federal law, it's illegal to receive political opposition research from foreign nationals.

Twitter, it seems, is playing a major role in the growing negative perception around Trump.

More than two-thirds – about 68 percent – of those surveyed in the Post/ABC poll said Trump's tweets are "inappropriate" or "insulting" (65 percent). Fifty-two percent said the tweets are "dangerous." And just 21 percent called the tweets "refreshing," which included 41 percent of self-identified Republicans"

But taking to Twitter on Monday, Trump seemed unfazed.

"The ABC/Washington Post Poll, even though almost 40 [percent] is not bad at this time, was just about the most inaccurate poll around election time!"

Actually, the polls were only about 3.5 percentage points off, but don't expect Trump to listen — he also claims he won the popular vote.

President Donald Trump's favorability rating has decreased recently.

Child in critical condition after fall into Schuylkill River

A child remains hospitalized Monday after falling into the Schuylkill River over the weekend.

According to police, on Saturday at about 11:58 a.m., a 3-year-old child fell off the edge of a dock into the Schuylkill River near St. Joseph's University's Boat House, along the 2200 block of Kelly Drive.

After the child fell into the river, police said, the child's father jumped in and attempted to find him, but was unable to do so.

According to several reports, a police marine unit was able to recover the child about 40 minutes later.

Law enforcement officials said that the child was taken to the intensive care unit at CHOP where it was last listed as being in critical condition.

US outlines NAFTA objectives

A new document asserts that no country should manipulate currency exchange to gain an unfair competitive advantage.

The United States on Monday outlined a tough negotiating strategy for revising the 1994 North American Free Trade Agreement and for the first time in a U.S. trade deal said it would seek to deter currency manipulation by trading partners.

In a much-anticipated document sent to lawmakers ahead of talks expected next month, U.S. Trade Representative Robert Lighthizer said the Trump administration aimed to reduce the U.S. trade deficit by improving access for U.S. goods exported to Canada and Mexico, the two countries in NAFTA besides the United States.

The 17-page summary of negotiations for NAFTA offers a glimpse into what a Trump administration trade agenda could look like. Until now, President Donald Trump's agenda has been shaped by campaign rhetoric and tweets.

While Canada and Mexico are not considered currency manipulators, the reference in the list of objectives could set a template for future trade deals such as a pending negotiation to modify a five-year-old U.S.-South Korea free trade deal.

South Korea is on a U.S. Treasury monitoring list for possible signs of currency manipulation.

Among the priorities, Lighthizer said the administration would seek to eliminate a trade dispute mechanism that has largely prohibited the United States from pursuing anti-dumping and anti-subsidy cases against Canadian and Mexican firms.

It also plans to eliminate a range of non-tariff barriers to U.S. agricultural exports to Canada and Mexico. These include subsidies and unfair pricing structures.

USTR said it would seek to strengthen NAFTA's rules of origin to ensure that the pact's benefits do not go to outside countries and to "incentivize" the sourcing of U.S. goods. It offered no details on such incentives and did not specify how much of a product's components must originate from within North America.

The demands that the Trump administration makes in the NAFTA talks could have far-reaching implications for U.S. trade relations across the globe, with China keen to make inroads with Mexico and Canada if the United States is seen to be retreating.

Lighthizer said the negotiations would begin no earlier than Aug. 16, 2017.

U.S. labor union leaders and Democratic lawmakers weighed in on the issue early, reminding Trump they expect him to keep 2016 election campaign promises to protect American workers in NAFTA talks. They stopped short of demanding termination of the 1994 trade pact with Canada and Mexico. REUTERS

Activists still demand answers in police shooting of black biker

Deputy Managing Director Brian Abernathy and Managing Director Michael DiBerardinis listen to activist Asa Khalif and other Black Lives Matter supporters after they entered DiBerardinis' office to request an update on the David Jones shooting. CHARLES MOSTOLLER

Anger simmers over fatal shooting of black man after motorcycle stop.

SAM NEWHOUSE
sam.newhouse@metro.us

Activists demanding answers about the fatal shooting of a black man last month barged into the Philadelphia managing director's office on Monday, before later protesting at a meeting of the Police Advisory Commission.

Local Black Lives Matter organizer Asa Khalif and activist Isaac Gardner heatedly questioned the city's managing director, Michael DiBerardinis, about the shooting of David Jones, 30, on June 8, after they and fellow activists entered his office in Center City.

But DiBerardinis, whose responsibilities include oversight of some police department activity through his public safety division, declined to comment on any aspect of the investigation into the shooting, which according to a preliminary police report, occurred as Jones was fleeing from Officer Ryan Pownall.

"Is it standard police pratice — let's leave David Jones out for a second — to shoot a suspect when they're fleeing in the back?" Khalif demanded.

DiBerardinis declined to make any assertion about the case and said he had not seen grainy surveillance video of the shooting broadcast by NBC10, but he promised to provide the activists with an update on the case within 48 hours.

"I'm not suggesting that your outrage is not warranted," he told them. "What I'm saying is I do not have the authority or the information ... to comment on the details."

Jones was reportedly riding his motorcycle on June 8 when Pownall, who was transporting witnesses to the Special Victims Unit, pulled Jones over. A preliminary police report said Jones pulled a gun, then fled before being shot by the officer. A loaded 9mm belonging to Jones was recovered from the scene.

But an alleged witness to the shooting, the man who was being transported in Pownall's car, has come forward to say Jones dropped the gun before he began to flee and was shot.

"He did not inform this man he was under arrest," claimed Terrance A., who declined to identify himself due to personal safety concerns. "He did not ask his name. How did he know if he was licensed to have the gun? That, to me, gives you the right to resist."

Terrance was being transported to Special Victims to report the kidnapping and possible sexual assault of his son in Frankford when Pownall saw Jones driving erratically and went to pull him over. Terrance claimed Pownall shot Jones with his Taser, then pulled a gun and shot him three times.

The police department is not commenting on the case, which is reportedly under investigation by Internal Affairs.

Terrance said he went to the DA's office to give a deposition, but did not because he was not allowed to have journalist and activist Chris Norris join him. Now he's asking for witness protection before speaking to prosecutors.

He added that he is "getting nothing out of this," but is sharing the story out of a desire to do the right thing: "I'm not going to tell a lie. The one thing I can tell you is what I saw," he said. "If something happened to me, I would want someone to give my family closure."

The iconic Rocky statue has become famous with visitors to Philadelphia from around the world. GETTY IMAGES

PHL: A GLOBAL DESTINATION

ROB WONDERLING

I was traveling through Old City the other day. As I passed Independence Hall, I noticed a long line of people snaking around the block that had come to see this historic landmark. When you live and work in Philadelphia, it's sometimes easy to forget that people travel from all around the world to the city where this nation was born, whether it be to visit the bustling Reading Terminal Market, snap a picture in front of the iconic Rocky statue or see the symbol of our city, the Liberty Bell.

Philadelphia has seen growth across the board over the past decade in industries such as life sciences, information technology and manufacturing. With the rich history that is imbedded in the city's cobblestone streets and strong presence of museums, restaurants, and activities, it is no surprise that tourism is yet another sector that has seen huge amounts of growth.

According to Visit Philadelphia's 2016 annual report, overnight leisure stays went from 7.3 million in 1997 to 14.7 million in 2016, an over 100 percent increase. Total visitation went from 26.7 million to 42 million, a 58 percent increase, and a total of 42 million people visited the Greater Philadelphia region last year, generating $11 billion in economic impact.

All of these numbers translate to a large amount of jobs in tourism in our region: There are 68,000 hospitality-related jobs in Philadelphia and 252,000 in the Philadelphia metro area.

The city has also hosted global events and gained international titles within the past couple of years, including hosting the World Meeting of Families and Pope Francis visit in 2015 (which generated an estimated $500 million), hosting the Democratic National Convention in July 2016 (which generated approximately $230.9 million), along with being named the first World Heritage City in the U.S. in 2015.

This growth hasn't gone unnoticed: U.S. News & World Report recently named Philadelphia the second-best place to visit in the U.S. in 2017, and our city has gained similar rankings in recent years such as Lonely Planet's No. 1 city to visit in 2016 and The New York Times' No. 3 place to visit in the world in 2015.

Greater Philadelphia isn't just a great place to do business; it is a global destination for people who want to learn more about where our nation began as well as see the innovation that is happening here and where it will take us in the future.

Not so fast: US restaurant workers seek ban on surprise scheduling

The issue of scheduling is becoming a new battleground for boosting living standards. GETTY IMAGES

Although fluctuating schedules affect mostly lower-paid workers, it is a management strategy that is starting to affect higher paid jobs as well.

The text message came as Flavia Cabral walked to a McDonald's restaurant in Manhattan for her 6 p.m. shift on a May evening. It was from her manager. Business was slow and she was not needed.

Cabral said she was not too surprised. Her work hours fluctuate almost weekly. This time, the canceled shift took a $63 bite out of her average $350 gross weekly earnings from two part-time jobs.

"Every week you're guessing how much money you're going to get and how many days you're going to work," said Cabral, 53, who has been employed at McDonald's for four years.But a measure of relief is coming for Cabral and 65,000 other New York City fast-food workers whose schedules and incomes often change with little or no notice.

New York recently became the largest U.S. city to require fast-food restaurants to schedule workers at least two weeks in advance, or pay them extra for changes.

The law, which the restaurant industry vigorously opposed, also requires employers to allow 11-hour breaks between shifts, offer part-time staff additional work before hiring new employees, and pay retail workers to be "on call." It takes effect late this year.

McDonald's Corp did not respond to a request for comment.

Nationwide, the issue of scheduling is becoming a new battleground in the fight to boost living standards for low-paid workers, waged largely by the "Fight for $15" movement. The five-year-old, union-backed initiative has already helped convince many jurisdictions, including New York state, to raise minimum wages.

In Oregon, a bill that would set regular scheduling for workers at large food service, hospitality and retail companies is awaiting the governor's signature. Similar bills are pending in five other states.

Not only do fluctuating schedules wreak havoc with tight household budgets, they make it difficult to make appointments, arrange child care and plan family time, workers point out.

The restaurant industry vigorously opposed the New York City law. Combined with higher minimum wages, scheduling requirements will eventually cripple some fast-food outlets, which mostly operate on thin profit margins of 1.5 to 3 percent, it says.

With a business model based on offering workers entry-level opportunities, not living wages, fast-food restaurants need flexible scheduling to survive, said industry advocate Louis Meyer, who runs fast-food operations at New Jersey-based Briad Group.

"There's no way you can stay in business," said Meyer, whose company employs 1,000 workers at about two dozen franchised Wendy's and TGI Friday's in New York. "It's like having a disease. It's going to get you sooner or later."

Workers at McDonald's, whose restaurants are mostly franchised, said weekly schedules are usually posted a day or two before they take effect. Still, they say they are often told at the last minute not to come to work or to punch out early. REUTERS

DRUG SMUGGLING

US officials: Marijuana shipment disguised as spare tires in new cars

About $1 million worth of smuggled marijuana was discovered last week in the spare tire compartments of newly assembled Ford Fusion sedans imported into the United States from Mexico, U.S. officials said on Monday.

The smuggling was uncovered on Wednesday when workers at a Ford dealer in Kent, Ohio, found the marijuana in a new Fusion, said Major Dale Kelly of the Portage County Sheriff's Office by phone.

In all, 15 Mexican-made Ford cars, each packed with marijuana instead of a spare tire, made it to Ohio by rail, the Drug Enforcement Agency said. The sheriff's office said that the shipment crossed over the Mexican border in Arizona.

None of the cars, each packed with 32 pounds of marijuana, made it to consumers, Balzano said.

The marijuana was likely supposed to be collected at the rail station or in transit, Bob Balzano, resident agent-in-charge of the DEA in Youngstown, Ohio, said by phone.

After reaching Ohio by rail, nine of the 15 cars were then taken by truck to auto dealerships in Ohio and one went to a dealer in Pennsylvania, Balzano said. Five other cars never left the rail yard in Lordstown, Ohio.

Of the 15 cars, 14 were Ford Fusion sedans and one was a Lincoln MKZ sedan, Balzano said.

The marijuana was tightly packed into crescents, so that when two halves were put together, they created a circular shape like a tire.

Ford Motor Co. spokeswoman Kelli Felker said the U.S. automaker was working with the Federal Bureau of Investigation and U.S. Customs. "We have confirmed that this is not happening at our plant or at our internal shipping yards," she said. REUTERS

DOUBLE-TALK MADE IN AMERICA

TOM FOREMAN

Opinion

CNN's Tom Foreman is the author of the book "My Year of Running Dangerously."

He climbed into a fire truck, slapped on a cowboy hat and beamed amid dozens of other American-made products from doughnuts to guitars. This is how President Trump kicked off the White House's Made in America Week — a promotional push encouraging business for U.S. manufacturers. And he made vague promises about policies to help those companies. "You're going to see things announced that you won't even believe for our country and for selling product in our country and making products in our country and things that are great for American jobs," he said.

At first blush, one might think it's a good notion: The idea is always popular with voters, it completely fits his "America first" theme, and frankly, it's not about Russia — so there is that. But alas, the best laid plans of mice and moguls …

Even before the ballyhoo began, headlines were screaming about Trump enterprises using foreign labor to make products proudly marketed on American shores. The Washington Examiner's headline called him the "president of hypocrisy," noting "The Donald J. Trump Collection is made everywhere except in the U.S. His shirts? Made in Bangladesh. His ties? Made in China. And his suits? Made in Mexico. Yes, that Mexico." And mind you, that is a paper popular with conservatives. The left-leaning websites weren't half so kind.

The first daughter and unpaid adviser to the president, Ivanka, was ripped over her fashion lines being churned out in far-flung places such as China, Vietnam and Bangladesh. So much so, that Press Secretary Sean Spicer spent part of the daily briefing trying — unsuccessfully — to explain it away.

We can argue over whether pushing "Made in America" is even a good idea. Plenty of economists say it is not. But I imagine all the criticism will be once again dismissed as fake news by the president's ardent fans. After all, they'll ask, why should the Trump empire struggle to make all its products here when the competition is getting cheaper prices across the ocean? But any business can make that same argument. So here is a better question: If the president won't lead by example, who does he think will follow?

FBI warns parents of privacy risks associated with internet-connected toys

Toys are displayed at the International Toy Show. GETTY IMAGES

The FBI on Monday warned parents of privacy and safety risks from children's toys connected to the internet.

In an advisory posted on its website, the Federal Bureau of Investigation said that such toys may contain parts or capabilities such as microphones, cameras, GPS, data storage and speech recognition that may disclose personal information.

Normal conversation with a toy or in the surrounding environment may disclose a child's name, school, likes and dislikes and activities, the FBI said.

"I think this is the first time the FBI has issued such warning," Tod Beardsley, director of research at cyber security firm Rapid7, said in a telephone interview.

"A lot of people tend to trust the FBI as a government organization, so it definitely raises awareness of the risk associated with internet-connected toys."

Smart toys and entertainment devices are gaining popularity for incorporating technologies that learn and tailor their behaviors based on user interactions.

Netflix beats subscriber targets, shares jump 11 percent

Netflix Inc. crushed Wall Street forecasts by adding 5.2 million new streaming customers in the second quarter and predicted continued momentum as it expands around the world, lifting its stock nearly 11 percent.

Shares of the company that pioneered streaming television jumped to $179.16 in after-hours trading, beating their all-time intraday high of $166.87 on June 8.

Netflix expects foreign growth to lead to its first full-year profit for overseas markets in 2017, the company said in a letter to shareholders.

At the end of June, Netflix for the first time recorded more subscribers abroad than in the United States — 52.03 million vs. 51.92 million.

The company said a strong slate of content, such as "13 Reasons Why" and the latest season of hit political drama "House of Cards," helped attract new customers in the second quarter, which is typically its slowest season of the year.

Netflix added 4.14 million non-U.S. subscribers, compared with the average analyst estimate of 2.59 million, according to data from analytics firm FactSet.

In the United States, it signed up 1.07 million subscribers, beating analysts' average estimate of 631,000.

Netflix is expecting international subscriber additions of 3.65 million for the current quarter, compared with analysts' average estimate of 3.2 million.

The guidance assumes much of this momentum will continue, the letter said, though it added that Netflix's forecasts had been too optimistic at times.

Netflix is spending $6 billion a year on content to win new subscribers in a quest to become the dominant movie and TV streaming service around the world even as it faces a slowdown in U.S. customer growth. REUTERS

Have you been diagnosed with acute migraine headaches?

Learn about this clinical research study that is evaluating an investigational drug for migraine headache relief.

Local doctors are evaluating an investigational drug to learn if it can provide faster pain relief with fewer side effects than currently available migraine medications.

To be considered for participation in this study, you must:

- Be between 18 and 75 years of age
- Have experienced 2 to 8 migraine attacks per month for at least the last 12 months, with 48 hours of headache-free time between attacks
- Have not had more than 14 headache days per month

All study-related visits, tests, and the investigational drug will be provided to participants at no cost. In addition, reimbursement for study-related time and travel may be provided.

R. Kelly is indefensible

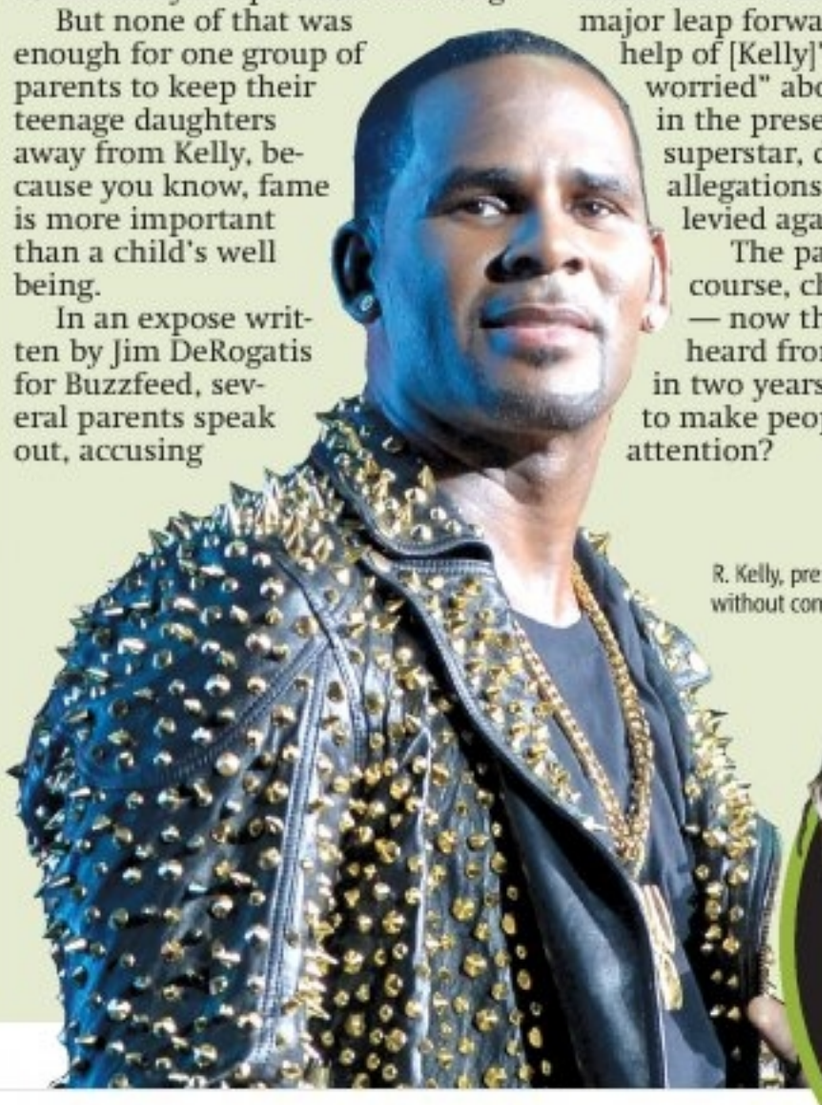
R. Kelly has been followed by accusations of bad behavior for a long time, and the many, many allegations against him have been consistently swept under the rung.

But none of that was enough for one group of parents to keep their teenage daughters away from Kelly, because you know, fame is more important than a child's well being.

In an expose written by Jim DeRogatis for Buzzfeed, several parents speak out, accusing Kelly of keeping their daughters in a sex-obsessed, abusive cult.

One parent, who was thrilled that her "19-year-old daughter's music career was going to make a major leap forward ... thanks to the help of [Kelly]" wasn't "overly worried" about her kid being in the presence of the R&B superstar, despite the many allegations that have been levied against him.

The parents have, of course, changed their tune — now that they haven't heard from their daughter in two years. Is that enough to make people start paying attention?



R. Kelly, presented without comment.

Aaron Carter shares his thoughts

Aaron Carter — a person most famous for a song about beating Shaq at basketball, which, nah — was arrested on DUI and marijuana charges Saturday night. Now he's taken to his Twitter to complain, and it's about as coherent as you'd expect.

He tweeted, then later deleted, "To be honest, I don't owe people explanations, although I must say, your words are powerful, the accusations of me being on heavy drugs hurts." Well, I don't know, stop acting like you're on heavy drugs, my dude.

He then dabbled with semi-inspirational quotes that make no damn sense, saying "Never be bullied into silence. Never allow yourself to be made a victim. Accept no one's definition of your life; define yourself." OK, dude. We get it. You meditated once and now you think you're some sort of guru.

But for real. What is this dude even saying? Just be like, yo, I got arrested and that sucks. That would be enough of a statement. Enough with this mindless ranting, my dude.

It's about as coherent as you'd expect.

People are mad Doctor Who is a woman

On Sunday, BBC announced that Jodie Whittaker would play the role of the 13th doctor on "Doctor Who." And even though people are mostly excited, there are some misogynists out there who are mad that the Doctor is a lady. Because, like, what if she just menstruates everywhere?!

Anyway, I'd like to focus on the people who embraced the announcement and had sarcastic responses, because really, why would you be mad about it unless you're a horrible person?

So much for progress.

ALL PHOTOS GETTY IMAGES

"Oh great a female Doctor Who," wrote Mark Hoppus, dude from Blink-182. "What next? Female real doctors? Female pilots? Female scientists? Female sisters and mothers? Female WOMEN?!"

This one's my favorite: "you [dumb]: let's argue about the gender of doctor who. me [smart]: actually it's doctor whom." Love syntax jokes!

But also? Call me up with they have a nonwhite Doctor and we can talk.

Mindy Kaling is preggers

Multiple sources have confirmed to E! News that everyone's fave, Mindy Kaling — creator and star of "The Mindy Project" who maybe never went on a date with Cory Booker — is pregnant with her first child, and I've never been this excited about, well, anything.

A source tells the site that the pregnancy was "an unexpected surprise," but that there won't be any changes made to production schedules for the 38-year-old's upcoming projects.

Kaling has been frank before about her desire to have children, telling Yahoo Style, "I think I've decided that unlike everything else in my life, I'm going to be fast and loose about kids. I'm going to not actively plan, but if it happens, it would happen." Well, looks like it's happening, all right.

Congratulations to Kaling! Now let's all get to work in our basement lairs and figure out who, exactly, the father could be.

I have so many questions...

Ryan Phillippe is still a heartthrob

The "Shooter" star is still as dreamy as ever.

RACHAEL VAUGHAN CLEMMONS
rachael.clemmons@metro.us

If you've visited the Twitter of Ryan Phillippe — the '90s teen movie heartthrob and Katy Perry-boyfriend denier — you know that he has a playful side. "I use social media [to make people laugh]. Yeah, I promote my projects, because you're sort of required to at this point. But when I do the personal stuff, it's almost always jokes," he says over the phone.

So what's he promoting these days? The very zen Phillippe is on the press trail for the second season of "Shooter," a thriller that follows the journey of Bob Lee Swagger, a highly decorated veteran, as he navigates his world of exile. "I like the challenge of portraying vets accurately," he says over the phone. "I love the training as well. I really enjoy getting into the tactics and learning how to look like a soldier." Oh, trust us. He looks the part.

We talked to the 42-year-old — who is thoughtful, funny and definitely still dreamy — about Twitter, depression and, of course,"Cruel Intentions."

You have a long history of playing soldiers on screen. What about it appeals to you?
It's something that I know, having had friends and family that have served and hearing their stories and spending time getting to know what's involved, and that kind of sacrifice. It's also the height of human drama.

Phillippe stars as Bob Lee Swagger in USA's thriller "Shooter." ISABELLA VOSMIKOVA/USA NETWORK

GETTY

So as an actor, I'm drawn to that material as well.

How do you prepare for that role, fitness-wise?
Because I do my own stunts, I have to physically train all the time; it's the best way to prevent injury. Or at least severe injury — I've always got little injuries but I don't want to get the big ones. [Ed note: Phillippe mysteriously injured his leg soon after our interview. So much for that.

Television is a bigger commitment, and you've talked a lot about talked about prioritizing your kids over acting. Is that just a realization you've had as you've gotten older?
No, no, no. That's always been, ever since my kids were born. Every decision you make, every choice that involves being away from them is a difficult one to make. And so I've limited myself a lot of ways because of that, in terms of turning down certain jobs.

Your Twitter has gotten a lot of attention lately. What do you like about the app?
Usually I'm just trying to be silly and have fun. I'm not really known by a lot of people as a funny person, [but] my favorite thing about [social media] is when I've made people laugh.

I've read that you have a long history of depression. How do you combat that?
I have a life that I'm really appreciative of. I'm so thankful, but there are days where I can't see or feel any of that. So there's another part of me that wants to show the reality of humanity. That even though things might look a certain way on the inside or that a person has the perfect life, it's not always that way.

And finally, we're obligated to talk to you about "Cruel Intentions." Did you ever think it would become so iconic?
I love the nostalgia, and that people continue to rediscover that movie. That's a rare thing! And I think it's cool.

Why you should see 'Dunkirk' on 70mm film

When the latest from Christopher Nolan opens Friday, 125 of the 3,000 or so theaters showing it will project it on 70mm film. You may have heard that it's the best way to see this World War II movie, but you may not know why you should care. Here's our guide to 70mm, and our argument that if you can see "Dunkirk" that way, you definitely should:

MATT PRIGGE

Christopher Nolan's "Dunkirk," in theaters Friday, concerns the evacuation of 40,000 English troops after a World War II battle in northern France. WARNER BROS. PICTURES

For starters, what is 70mm film?

It's a high-resolution format of celluloid film. It is, of course, twice the size of 35mm, which for decades was how most films were projected in theaters. What that means is higher quality: a clearer picture, even stronger colors and blacks and whites. In 70mm's heyday, spanning from the 1950s through the early '70s, it wasn't used all the time. Usually it was reserved for big epics: "Lawrence of Arabia," "Cleopatra," "2001: A Space Odyssey." Its high costs led to it falling from favor.

Since then it's occasionally been revived, in films like Ron Howard's "Far and Away," from 1992, and Kenneth Branagh's 1996 version of "Hamlet." Over the last handful of years, though, certain filmmakers have brought it back with some frequency, including Paul Thomas Anderson ("The Master"), Quentin Tarantino ("The Hateful Eight") and Christopher Nolan (first with "Interstellar," now with "Dunkirk"). Still, it remains rare.

Can I only see "Dunkirk" in 70mm?

No. There are six ways you can see it. It will be showing in plain old digital, the industry standard. It will also be shown digitally in Imax Laser and Imax Xenon; the former is the exact same shape as Imax film (i.e., like a square), while the latter is not as tall as the former. Additionally, you can see it in 35mm film. The ideal way to see it, which is to say Nolan's preferred format, is 70mm Imax. But if there isn't an Imax theater near you, you can see it in 70mm in traditional multiplex theaters that are showing it. (Check our site to see which theaters will show it that way.)

Frankly, why should I care?

Nolan did shoot it in 70mm (and 35mm), but we get it: Unless you're seeing it in giant, retina-filling Imax 70mm, the average moviegoer may not notice the difference between film and digital. To explain the difference, we turned to an expert: John Sittig, a longtime projectionist who runs the projection unit at Reading Cinemas, which owns theaters in America, Australia and New Zealand.

"It's just a different experience," Sittig says about 70mm versus digital. "I use the words warmer or softer. Digital is strikingly sharp — almost unrealistically sharp to me, in some cases. Film has a warmth or some kind of texture that is more realistic."

OK, which format should I see if I can choose from any option?

We say Imax 70mm. Nolan has been making films with partial Imax footage since "The Dark Knight" in 2008. We'd guesstimate 70 to 75 percent of "Dunkirk" is in 70mm Imax, and it really is something to behold. But if you don't live near an Imax theater showing it on 70mm, regular 70mm is better than any kind of digital. Movie tickets are expensive, and with 70mm, you get more bang for your buck.

Looking for a reason to escape the hustle and bustle of Center City? Plan a visit to Ardmore for its third annual restaurant week and see what this adorable Main Line town has cooking.

From now through July 30, 18 restaurants are participating along Ardmore's Main Street and will offer both $25 and $35 three-course meals. In addition, select eateries will offer 25 percent off appetizers during happy hour, from 5 p.m. to 7 p.m.

For year three, six new restaurants are participating, including Maido, Pala'a, PokeOno, Ristorante Positano, Sam's Asian Cuisine and The Beer Shoppe.

"Ardmore Restaurant Week is becoming one of our most popular events," says Christine Vilardo, executive director of the Ardmore Initiative. "Ardmore has a reputation on the Main Line — and beyond — as one of the fastest-growing dining destinations in the area.

"Ardmore Restaurant Week gives us a chance to celebrate established Ardmore favorites and introduce the 'new kids on the block.' With choices from Mexican to Moroccan, you can eat somewhere special and try something new each night."

Here are a few restaurants we're excited to try:

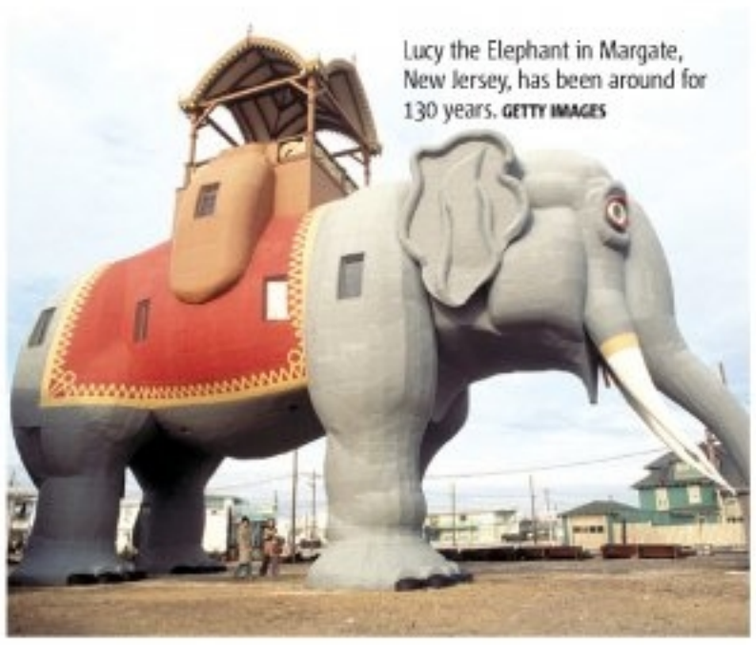
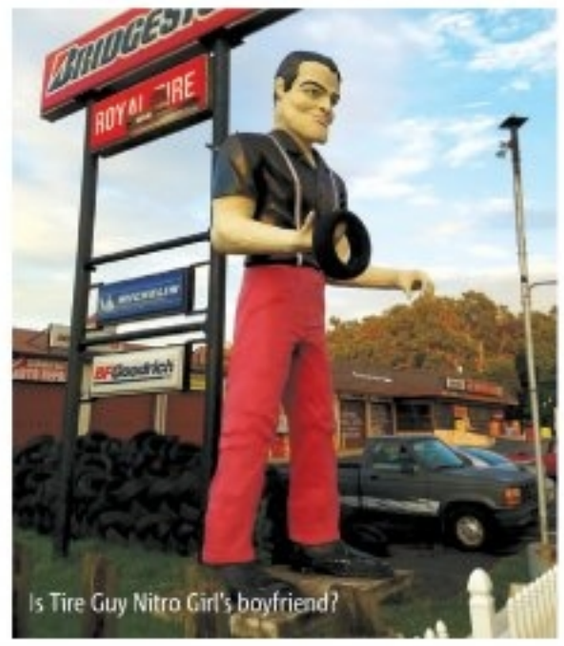
Nitro Girl watches over Blackwood, New Jersey.



Lucy the Elephant in Margate, New Jersey, has been around for 130 years. GETTY IMAGES



Is Tire Guy Nitro Girl's boyfriend?

Summer is the time for car trips, whether day-long excursions to a local theme park or week-long vacations at the Jersey Shore. But what can be done to help deal with the monotony of hours-long rides in the car, with nothing around for miles but the open road?

Roadside attractions, of course! And you don't need to go all the way to the old Route 66 to see them, either. There are plenty in our own backyard.

On your next lengthy car trip, here are some unique spots that are worth checking out.

Lucy the Elephant

Our area's best-known roadside attraction, Lucy the Elephant, has been a fixture of the Margate, New Jersey shore for over 130 years, making her the oldest surviving roadside attraction in the entire country. Once home to everything from a restaurant to a tavern, Lucy now houses a museum and gift shop.
Margate, New Jersey

Nitro Girl

Outside of the Werbany Tire Co. on the Black Horse Pike in Blackwood, New Jersey, stands a towering woman proudly holding a tire in the sky. This is "Nitro Girl," and she has been a fixture of the tire company since 1965. Once decked out in traditional 1960s garb, she was given a makeover in 2007 to have the appearance of a superhero.
Blackwood, New Jersey

Tire Guy in Pink

Just a short drive away from Nitro Girl is the "Tire Guy in Pink" (who, according to locals, is her "boyfriend"). Towering over the White Horse Pike, the Tire Guy in Pink got his name from the bright pink pants that he sports. Like Nitro Girl, he is a member of the "Muffler Men" family of giant roadside people and stands outside of Royal Tire and Auto on the White Horse Pike in Magnolia, New Jersey.

Cookie Jar House

On a quiet residential street in Glendora, New Jersey, don't be surprised if you have a sudden craving for cookies. On Rowand Avenue near the Black Horse Pike, you will find a round-shaped house that looks like a cookie jar. This is a relic from the 1950s, which was built in such a shape as to withstand an atomic bomb attack. If you visit, keep in mind that it is a private residence; don't knock on the door and expect

Grumman Greenhouse

When you hear the word "greenhouse," chances are that you don't think of the wreckage of an old airplane. Nevertheless, right in the heart of Center City Philadelphia, this is exactly what you will find! Nestled between two buildings of the Pennsylvania Academy of Fine Arts on Broad Street, the Grumman Greenhouse is a working greenhouse situated in the cockpit of an old 1960's era U.S. Navy Grumman Tracker S-2E plane. It was given new life—plant life, to be specific—by artist Jordan Griska in 2011.

Giant Stethoscope and Medical Bag

Chances are that if you are a patient at the Apex Medical Center in Newark, Delaware, you never have any problem finding what building you are supposed to enter! Situated on the medical center's property on Stanton Christiana Road is a giant doctor's bag, complete with equally large stethoscope. With parking surrounding the facility, is it easy to pop out and snap a few memorable pictures before heading back out onto the road.

10 years of Philly Chit Chat

HughE Dillon looks back on 10 years of Philly Chit Chat. JENNIFER LOGUE

HughE Dillon needs no introduction in Philly. If there's something noteworthy happening here, chances are he's already on the scene or has already published a post to his popular news and gossip site, Philly Chit Chat, which celebrates its 10-year anniversary tonight at Aqimero.

"I don't have any training in journalism or photography," says the Fairmount resident. "But I can see what news is and write about what I think other people would be interested in."

Over his career so far, he's captured our blossoming city from every angle — getting photos of superstars like Dev Patel, Kevin Hart and Katy Perry while they're in town as well as documenting Philadelphia's social scene in an inclusive way that just wasn't done before, covering everything from over-the-top galas to neighborhood block parties.

"I'm the type of person who's never going to be in the society section," he says. "I wanted to photo everyone at events. You don't have to be beautiful and you don't have to be a big corporate sponsor."

Before starting Philly Chit Chat, Dillon honed his skills in New York City, photographing celebrities for his first blog, Confessions of a Paparazzi, which launched in 2006.

"I was working as a paralegal in Philadelphia at the time," he says. "I'd go into work at 7 a.m., finish at 3 p.m. and then travel to New York at night. Sometimes I didn't sleep."

After traveling back and forth between the two cities for many years, in 2007, he decided to create a website all about Philadelphia, showing the world just how vibrant the city was in terms of culture, entertainment and nightlife.

"I didn't want to just write about Philly gossip, but everything going on here," he remembers. "My friend Simon came up with the name Philly Chit Chat and I knew immediately that was it."

All those years ago, however, Philly was a very different city and there weren't that many events happening. Dillon would cover everything he could — from trunk shows to fundraisers to hanging out at Starr restaurants for photos of celebrities.

"No one's star rose quicker than Stephen Starr," says Dillon. "Somehow he was able to get the word out to A-listers at their hotels to come to his restaurants. Gwen Stefani, Paul Rudd, Owen Wilson — I've gotten a lot of good photos of celebrities coming out of Starr restaurants."

Remember that time Katy Perry came to Philly wearing a pizza onesie? HughE captured that. HUGHE DILLON

HughE Dillon at Aqimero

Don't let all the glitz and glamor fool you, however. Dillon also uses his lens to give back to the community.

"When I started Philly Chit Chat, I saw there were so many people in need. I realized I could shine a little light on charities through my blog. I wanted to help people. I wasn't looking for notoriety," he says.

Tonight, Dillon raises a toast to 10 years of Philly Chit Chat at the swanky Latin fusion restaurant Aqimero in the Ritz Carlton with a few hundred of his closest supporters. While the event is private, attendees are encouraged to make a $20 donation to the American Foundation for Suicide Prevention.

"I am so thankful to everyone who let me photograph them over the years to tell the story of Philadelphia," he says.

Your guide to good vaginal health

wellbeing

Tips for maintaining good vaginal pH: Take a daily probiotic, be sure to change out of sweaty clothes or a wet bathing suit as soon as you can and change menstrual products every few hours. ALL PHOTOS ISTOCK

How to prevent yeast infections, bacterial vaginosis and more in these muggy summer months.

KATE MOONEY
@yatinbrooklyn
kate.mooney@metro.us

Summertime. You're sweating a lot, all over, but there's one area that gets particularly, shall we say, lush. Sure, people laugh, even commiserate about swamp ass all the time, but why isn't anyone talking about swamp vagina?

Beyond the discomfort of having constantly sweat-saturated lady parts, the excess moisture can also cause a couple issues, namely yeast infections and bacterial vaginosis (BV). While you obviously can't avoid sweating, there are a few ways to keep your subtropical region in check. We consulted Dr. Taraneh Shirazian, assistant professor in the department of obstetrics and gynecology at NYU Langone Medical Center, to talk us through the lifestyle measures we can take to maintain good vaginal health during these muggy months.

Moisture control

"I would probably refrain from exercising in [excessive] heat," Shirazian says. As you sweat, the moisture that accumulates in and around your vagina "sets off the vaginal pH, so there's an overgrowth of yeast and bacteria," she explains.

If you're hooked on staying active no matter the temp, at least be vigilant about changing out of that sweaty underwear as soon as you're done your workout, Shirazian says. If you commute to work via bike, bring a clean pair of underwear to change into. If you use baby wipes, make sure they're scent-and- fragrance-free, she notes -- both can also alter pH balance. "Even water on toilet paper would be good," she says.

You also want to be sure the clothing you're wearing isn't restrictive, she adds. (Thongs and tight jean shorts are not the best idea.)

If you spend a lot of time in pools during the summer, be mindful that the exposure to chlorine could also disrupt things down there. To prevent against that happening, Shirazian says to make sure you're not sitting around in a wet swimsuit — a good rule of thumb after swimming in salt or fresh water.

If you commute on bike, bring a pair change of underwear to change into post-ride.

Diet

Shirazian recommends a daily dose of an over-the-counter probiotic supplement — especially for women who are already prone to yeast infections — to keep your pH levels in check. Foods that contain probiotics, such as yogurt, kombucha and kimchi are also good to work into your daily diet.

Stay away from high-sugar foods, which can cause an overgrowth of yeast. That includes alcohol, particularly those fruity, summery cocktails like margaritas and pina coladas.

Menstruation

Wearing tampons for too many hours can cause bacteria to grow. "Anything that you're placing internally during your menstrual cycle, change it frequently, every few hours," she says. That also goes for reusable menstrual devices such as a Diva Cup.

What about sex?

Because it's hotter outside, bacteria breed more, causing any bacterial infection you have, like a urinary tract infection (UTI), to likely be worse in the summer, Shirazian explains, although you're not more likely to get a UTI now than any other time of year. One of the main causes of a UTI is bacteria from the vagina, penis, or anus getting trapped in the urethra during sex.

"Sex is a year-round thing, but maybe it's happening more in the summer, I don't know," she jokes.

Using a condom can lower your chances by preventing the exchange of sperm and vaginal bacteria, she explains. (Peeing after sex is another good move, as it helps clear out the urinary tract.)

You should always practice good hygiene with any sex toys that you use, as well, and be even more vigilant during the summer months. "Anything that you put inside you that has the ability to grow bacteria, can affect the pH," she explains. Make sure you're cleaning your sex toys with soap and water after each use.

MAYWEATHER VS. MCGREGOR IS NOTHING BUT A SHAM

ANALYSIS

Glen Macnow has been an outspoken voice in Philly sports for nearly three decades.
@realglenmacnow

Just when you think professional fighting can't sink any lower, here comes Floyd Mayweather and Conor McGregor with the scam of the century.

To consider this travesty of a mockery of a sham an actual sporting event is to insult everyone who ever laced up gloves.

Mayweather, a once-great boxer and always-awful human being, will pad his record to 50-0 by outpointing a mixed martial arts performer who has never fought outside the rules of the Octagon. Vegas posted odds of 7/1 for Mayweather, and people who know the sport far better than I say that's a sucker's bet.

Ah, but this really isn't about an actual competitive fight. As three cross-continental spectacles showed last week, this is about sinking beneath the dignity of Chris Christie to motivate people to spend $99.99.

So Mayweather and McGregor snorted and screamed, slashing with racism and homophobia and every other hateful invective that fighting considers gamesmanship. Other sports would suspend participants for such ugliness. But here, tugging on your crotch is considered strategy.

Listen, I was a boxing fan from the first time I saw Muhammad Ali and while I rarely watch MMA, I don't question the toughness of its competitors.

I'm also realistic enough that I don't hold either sport up to Marquess of Queensberry standards. I remember the undignified way Ali taunted Joe Frazier by waving a toy gorilla. And I've seen Mike Tyson threaten to eat the children of opponents. But this lowrent peep show is 10,000 feet beneath even those tawdry episodes.

No one is guiltier for boxing's demise than the 40-year-old Mayweather. He has made a career of avoiding credible opponents until they're using a walker. He hasn't knocked anyone out since 2011. His behavior makes Tyson seem like the pope. He hasn't fought in two years and may only be doing this because the IRS recently hit him with a $29 million tax lien.

This will be a 12-round boxing match, with 10-ounce gloves.

McGregor's best hope is to catch Mayweather with a surprise punch early. He's more aggressive than anyone Mayweather has fought in years, and he's a lefty, which is always tricky. There's no way he has the stamina to win late rounds when Mayweather is likely just to flash jabs and win a decision by 1,000 paper cuts.

As I said, Floyd wouldn't have taken this fight unless he knew he would win. That's how he's run his career.

The once-sweet science has nothing left worth selling. There hasn't been a pay-per-view fight that lived up to its hype since — I don't know, Mike Tyson bit off Evander Holyfield's ear? Most sports fans can't tell you the current heavyweight champ (trick question: There are four separate no-names recognized by different governing bodies).

So the sport has to lean on its sleazy little brother, MMA, for hype. Mayweather and McGregor are the carnies, ready to take your crumbled bills to show you the lurid sights behind the tent curtain.

Trust me, there's nothing there worth seeing.

Finding the best fantasy draft position

A look at the best spots to pick and choose players from in your upcoming fantasy draft.

EVAN MACY
@evan_macy
evan.macy@metro.us

The Steelers' Antonio Brown will be picked early and often in fantasy drafts next month. GETTY IMAGES

It's just about that time for fantasy football team owners to pick their draft position for upcoming drafts in August and September.

Which leads to an eternal burning question — how much does draft order matter?

The gut instinct for a fantasy owner is to want the No. 1 pick. This would provide the most control. Many leagues allow participants to pick their draft order based on the previous year's standings, while others automatically assign draft position based on a variety of factors. It might not be the best strategy to aspire for the highest possible draft slot — it can be a little more nuanced. Here are some things to consider when weighing where one should want to draft:

It's a snake

For the most part, fantasy drafts take a wraparound, snake format. Which means in a 10-team league, the first overall pick would also pick 20th and 21st. That's a long time to wait between drafting players, and there could be a big drop off in player-quality as opposed to, say, drafting 7th, 14th and 27th. It's definitely worth considering your plan for the second and third rounds when deciding where to draft from.

CBS SPORTS CONCLUDED THAT THE NO. 3 SPOT IS THE IDEAL PLACE TO DRAFT FROM IN A 12-TEAM LEAGUE

The top tier

How many players would you be happy with in the first round? This year, there isn't really a clear cut top four or five players. Deciding how many players you'd be satisfied with as your first round pick can help determine your optimal draft spot.

Sophisticated stats

There is not much data available on which draft slots yield the most league champions. One study conducted by fantasyfootballimpact.com found that twice as many league champions came from the sixth spot in 10-team leagues than any other spot, with the ninth spot providing the second most champions. However the distribution was rather equal across the different draft positions — with nearly a third of first and second place finishers starting with the top overall pick.

12 teams?

In leagues with 12 teams, the data is similar (though still sparsely found). In a study from 2013, CBSSports surmised through number crunching that the No. 3 draft spot had the most league winners, with the fourth and fifth slots tying for second most. In this analysis, 10th 11th and 12th are the three worst spots to draft from.

The data seems to suggest that the latest in a first round you can get an impact player the better spot for a drafter — as they'll have better position in subsequent rounds.

Fantasy rankings

Metro ranks the top 10 players in 2017 Fantasy.

1. Antonio Brown, WR, Steelers
2. Odell Beckham, WR, Giants
3. Julio Jones, WR, Falcons
4. Mike Evans, WR, Buccaneers
5. Le'Veon Bell, RB, Steelers
6. Ezekiel Elliott, RB, Cowboys
7. AJ Green, WR, Bengals
8. Dez Bryant, WR, Cowboys
9. Jordy Nelson, WR, Packers

Aries An interesting idea will give you something to explore. There is money to be made if you turn something you enjoy doing into a moneymaking venture.

Taurus Emotional matters will mount. Look for a way to compromise in order to avoid a change of plans. A frugal approach to personal and domestic problems is encouraged.

Gemini You'll have a false sense of your assets and capabilities. Money matters should be dealt with conservatively. Don't spend what you don't have. Focus on self-awareness.

Cancer Consider the consequences of your actions before you proceed. A considered plan will serve you better than an impulsive move. Form an alliance with a trustworthy peer.

Leo Stick to the script. If you exaggerate, you will end up in an emotional situation that will slow down your efforts to get ahead. Personal improvements can be made.

Virgo Attend an event that will be conducive to meeting people in your profession. The more contacts you make, the easier it will be for you to advance.

Libra Refuse to follow the crowd. If something doesn't appeal to you or appears to be too risky, you are best off remaining a spectator and learning from what you see.

Scorpio What you do will make a difference, but what you say will lead to trouble. If you do something nice for someone you love or trust, you will get something special in return.

Sagittarius You'll have plenty to say and to offer, but use diplomacy to avoid an emotional backlash. Someone will be hurt if you are too blunt about what you think about him or her.

Capricorn Share your feelings and make your intentions clear. Stick to the truth and be willing to compromise to please a friend, family member or co-worker.

Aquarius ou are best off being secretive until you have a solid idea to offer. Emotional disputes are likely to develop if you disagree with a partner, friend or relative.

Pisces Take part in your community or in things that friends and relatives are doing. What you contribute will be rewarded with favors that will help you advance. EUGENIA LAST
